As goes the contrast between absolute and relative, so go other metaphysical contrasts. This idea contrasts neatly with traditional forms of theism that hold God to be or at least conceived as being, in all respects non-temporal eternalunchanging immutable, and unaffected by the world impassible.

This future is as unknown to God as it is to us, except that when God feels "things are just right" He will "close the curtain" and usher in the age to come. This, say Open Theists, allows God to have a genuine and authentic relationship with mankind. Bibliography Arnold, Daniel A.
