Welcome to my faultline the part of me, that spends life looking for a way to see, reasons my paths go from here to there, and all those who crossed into. The Worth of Dreams Copyright March Lucid meditations carried beyond the sound, of the rain's tapping chorus on the sill, searching throughout having no answers found, knowing such matters elude our want or .

For what is within me is without thou grace as wind and rain dance their rhythm That in perfect balance does not last long, when this life plays out this well worn song, who will care to dance to this music at best, feeling the pain of it all deep in their chest?
As sorrowful as statues hand made by ye own hand with cowardice inlaid, take ye not the grand artist's prize, with clenched hands and accusing eyes?
The boatman calls aloud our hearts in wait, along these rails I strain to look must accept that which I cannot mold into the former, a warmth now grown cold.
