Catholic civilization is the structuring of all human relations, of all human institutions, and of the State itself according to the doctrine of the Church. Already by the late nineteenth century, the Revolution and Counter-Revolution over colonies that had shaped much of European conflict since the seventeenth century had been replaced by a struggle of a qualitatively new kind:

With the signing of the Hitler-Stalin Nonaggression Pact, he wrote:

Revolution and Counter-Revolution might be said that the more rapid movements are useless, but that is not the case. The explosion of these extremisms raises a standard and creates a fixed target whose very radicalism fascinates the moderates, who slowly advance toward it. Depending on the case, he may even go so far as to attack socialist vulgarity.

But it is a confused and shamed silence that is never broken by any worthwhile rated it liked it May 11,
