How Do People Survive Gunshot Wounds? | Colorado Shooting

First there would be pain, bleeding, leakage of intestinal contents into the abdomen and sometimes out of the wound. Then infection of the abdominal cavity.

The part where Holden pretends that he got shot in the guts, and he's bleeding like hell, I have no idea why, but i can't seem to get that part out.

Most of what we learn about gunshot wounds, we learn from watching television. Most of that is wrong.

AUSTRALIAN troops on the front line in Afghanistan are being rushed new Star Wars-style full body armour after one soldier was shot dead.

Reading for self-knowledge is not fashionable in the academy, but it's exactly what our students need.

The easy availability of handguns in the United States, complimented by the upsurge of gun violence in a civilian urban setting, has increased the possibility of encountering bullet embolism [2]. Case Report An year-old male was brought into an urban, level-one trauma center by emergency medical service after reportedly being shot in the buttocks. Most reports are regarding military conflicts or vascular emboli.

The remaining intestines had alternating sections of smooth, tan, edematous

One of the earliest and largest report series was by Mattox et al. Consequences of such a missed injury can be devastating and prove fatal as shown in our case.

And within major organs such as the heart or liver, some injuries are more serious. Bullets are able to tumble through the gastrointestinal tract and cause perforation of the intestinal lumen which is small enough to be easily missed.
