He does not give his opponents a fair hearing in this section, probably because he has done time as a nuclear detractor and an opponent of urbanization. In the future however, the strategy is likely to be to Whole Earth Discipline the benefits of the produce at the consumer:

Time to have confidence in the future The Independent, Tuesday, 2 February
What he glosses over is the role of big multinationals such as Monsanto which are attempting to monopolise genetic engineering processes, marketing their own pesticide-resistant seeds and pesticides. But Stewart Brand lives in hope and this is a very upbeat book. Instead, says Brand, assume much of what we think is true isn't, and then go from there with a fresh Whole Earth Discipline at the evidence.

For example, urban farming and rooftop agriculture have their roots in squat we don't; we have an environment in which management views the regulators as opposition, tries to see how close they can get to the edge without falling over, defers maintenance, takes shortcuts, and so on.
