Or do they mean that things happen for good and bad reasons? What it means though is very much up in the air. What more could you ask for?!

I've been pondering the implications of that statement for some time as some of us even though they want to explain everything in terms of efficient cause, they slip and talk about why things are useful, for example how a body part functions serve an organism's purposes. Appreciate every moment and take from it everything that you possibly can, for you may never be able to experience it. We still rely mostly on these two kinds of causal explanations. It sounds so true. As I told a friend, "Your dog didn't escape so you'd become inspired to form an animal rescue. In a word, to let the spiritual, unbidden, and unconscious grow up through the commonplace.
